In an interview with the Miami Herald lest fall, Mr. Rebozo was quoted as saying that the IRS had cleared him of wrongdoing after a 12-week investigation that ended in the summer of 1973. The Senate committee's six-month inquiry into the $100,000 became more heated last month after the panel heard testimony by Herbert Kalmbach, President Nixon's former personal attorney. Well-placed sources said Kalm-bach testified that Mr. Rebozo told him last April 30 that he had "used" the $100,000 in cash to make payments or loans to the President's two brothers, Edward Nixon and Donald Nixon. and to Mr. Nixou's personal secretary, Rose Mary Woods, "among others."

longer shapes our relationship."
"We in the United States have come to recognize that a revolution has taken place in Latin America, Industrialization and modern communication have transformed economic and social life. This is why our new dia-

Meir's Party Bars Call For Elections

TEL AVIV, April 21 (UPI). The ruling Labor party decided today to try to form a transitional government without cailing new elections, despite warnings that it faces problems in forming a workable coalition.

The party's Central Committee. its policymaking body held off until tomorrow any decision on whom to choose as its candidate to replace Premier Golda Meir, who resigned April 11.

The two candidates competing for the candidacy to the premiership are Labor Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Information Minister Shimon Perés.

Those of the committee present voted 233-170, to 'make an effort to establish a new government." All the members of Mrs. Meir's cabinet voted in favor of new elections.

The committee members then voted 239-137 against new elections.

In another country in a tense situation, Egypt. President Anwar Sadat has said publicly that "it would be a real tragedy for our area and for the world" if Mr. Nixon were forced out of office.

The Egyptians have asserted that under Mr. Nixon the United States has made a fundamental shift toward a more even-handed policy in the Middle East. A change in the White House would cause concern in Cairo, even with Mr. Kissinger staying on.

The secretary of state was reported to have told Egyptian For-eign Minister Ismail Fahmy, in Washington talks, that even if Mr. Nixon is impeached, he would be able to survive trial in the Senate. Therefore. Mr. Kissinger was said to have advised the Egyptians, they should not worry about the political situation.

Effects Disclaimed

The secretary has told newsmen privately that he is confident that Mr. Nixon will remain in office and that, in any case, impeachment discussions have no direct bearing on his activities.

Nonetheless the President's political difficulties have had perceptible impact on the conduct of foreign policy. Some State Department officials have said that they believe that his decision to hold several meetings while in Paris for President George; Pompidou's funeral two weeks ago was motivated in part by political considerations.

On the way home from Paris. Gen. Alexander Halg jr., the White House chief of staff, said that "it was very evident that European leaders and world leaders with whom the President met continue to look to the Unit-ed States and President Nixon as an exential factor in the realization of the continuing efforts to develop a structure for a stable international environment.

With a summit meeting planned for Moscow in June, the White House has emphasized the relationship that Mr. Nixon has built with Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet Communist leader.

However, a Russian said at the United Nations the other day that he was concerned that Mr. Nixon might take an overly tough stance in Moscow to prove that fort to get a strategic-arms ac-

The President's troubles have caused some problems for the Japanese, who seem to assume that he will not last out his term, which runs to January, 1967.

Impeachment would probably be viewed as a loss of face for the United States, but sources in Tokyo agree that it would not have much permanent impact on Japanese-Americar ties, which have been loosened in recent years by Japan's gradual shift from virtually total dependence on the United States and toward more balanced relations with China, Europe and the Soviet

In Africa, where President Nixon's problems have not aroused much concern or interest, and where local problems predominate, his fate seems to be considered of no particular importance. # End to Keynesian Approach

Some Experts Say U.S. in Economy of Scarcity

By Paul E. Steiger WASHINGTON April 21,-Businessmen and farmers scramble for short supplies of steel, chemicals and fertilizer. Unemployment rises. The nation's output of goods and servi ; takes it sharpest tumble in 16 years. Inflation continues its seemingly unstoppable march To more and more Americans, the once invincible U.S. economy is beginning to look increasingly like a pitiful, helpless giant, no longer able to keep its subjects fortified with their accustomed unending supplies of toilet paper tomato paste and tennis balla. What is going wrong? Part of the answer is that the national economy is going through one of its periodic downward cycles, exacerbated this tir: by the complication of the recent five-month Arab oil embargo But beyond that, some economists suggest, the nation's economic life also appears to be entering a new phase, one in which the economics of plenty may have to be superseded-at least for a while-by the economics of scarcity, In the 1930s, British economist John Maynard Keynes touched off a revolution in economic policy making by demonstrating that, left to their own devices, a nation's people often saved too much and spent too little of their earnings to keep all its farms, factories and workers bus;. Therefore, Mr. Keynes showed. by borrowing some of the public's excess savings—that is, by run-ning budget deficits—governments could increase their spending to create jobs and provide new services for the public without putting undue strain on the

Or, if they chose, governments could simply cut taxes, thereby transferring new spending power to consumers and increasing purchases and employment that way Introduced in the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt, these principles have found in-creasing acceptance in the United States. They have been wide-ly credited with fostering prosperity and dampening recessions in the years since World War II. Now however, there are signs that the conditions Mr. Keynes observed may have changed. Savings, which were excessive in Mr. Keyness day, now may not be fully adequate to finance the nation's investment needs, some economists say, Moreover, the economy is currently suffering from a series of snocks that have had ferocious impact on a few sectors—energy, autos and agriculture, for ex-ample—while leaving others largely untouched. The Keynesian prescriptions, which operate on the economy as a whole, are the wrong medicine for this kind of disease, contends Donald Ratajezak, Massachusetts Institute of Technology-trained economist now at Georgia State University. What all this adds up to he and other economists conclude, is the need for slower growth of consumer spending and tighter control over the federal budget than most Americans-and most American political leaders-bave grown accustomed to: the economics of scarcity.

This need not be terribly painful these economists say. Barry Bosworth, an economist at the nonprofit Brookings Institution here, estimates that by devoting an extra 1 percent of the nation's total yearly output investment the nation can mect its requirements for new energy supplies and new machinduring the next decade. Even so, such adjustments are tikely to prove unpalatable to many Americans, particularly those facing unemployment. But if the new conditions are not recognized and the necessary restraints imposed, a number of economists warn, the result is likely to be accelerating inflation and the need for a far more drastic readjustment later. To Herbert Stein, the acid-longued chairman of President

Nixon's Council of Economic advisers, it is time that Americans learned that they cannot be shielded from all economic strains and that long-run prosperity may require pattence in the face of short-run problems. Walter Heller, who was President John Kennedy's top eco-who served Lyndon Johnson in a similar capacity, have called for an immediate tax cut. Meanwhile, such other prominent Democratic economists as John Kenneth Galbraith and Gardner Ackley have urged fiscal nomic adviser, and Arthur Okun,

But those who believe there has been a sharp change in economic realities are beginning to amass arguments and evidence to buttress their case.

In the 1960s, they note, numerous factors combined to make it possible for U.S. citizens to enjoy all-out economic boom without excessive inflation or strain on domestic productive capacity. Many of these factors have now disappeared, leaving the economy much more vulnerable to shortages and ballooning prices. Por example:

• In the 1960s, an overvalued dollar enabled American consumers to obtain cheap supplies of cars and cameras, oil and copper from abroad. Devaluation of the dollar in the 1970s has end-ed that. Where the supplies are still available, they are no longer

nomic booms, foreign nations frequently were undergoing recession. As a result, U.S. manufacturers were able to import large quantities of such materials as steel at bargain prices because foreign producers had nowhere else to sell it. Now, foreign business cycles have moved into phase with U.S. conditions, and when Americans are short of such materials there are no ready supplies abroad.

The sell-off of the oncehuge U.S. grain stockpiles removed a cushion that formerly prevented big swings in the prices of food products in the United States. Now, if a crop is bad, millers and animal feeders here and abroad have to fight among themselves for the remaining supply, and prices can double in a matter of months. The option of releasing an extra sup-ply from the stockpile is gone.

In this environment, inflation has become a far more intractable and dangerous problem, and the risks of excessive stimulation of the economy have become cor-respondingly greater, many economists believe.

As the pace of inflation in-creases, the risk mounts that it will accelerate. Businessmen and workers start racing to increase prices and wages. Consumers become less willing to save. because, even at high interest rates, they fear their savings will decline in value. So instead they pour more of their earnings into purchases, thereby driving up ices further.

Mohammed Ayub Khan, 66, Headed Pakistan 11 Years

Field Marshal Mohammed Ayub Khan, president of Pakistan from 1958 to 1969, died of a heart attack Friday at his home near Islamabad. He was 66, and had been living in quiet retirement since relinquishing power five years ago.

He was buried today in his ancestral village of Rehama, in the foothills of the Himalayas, Tall and dapper, a product of the British Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst and of army tradition, Marchal Ayub brought a paternalistic but toughly efficient rule and a measure of stability to turbulent Pakistan during his 11-year presidency, which began and ended with bloodless military take-overs.

His political enemies considered him a despot. Under his brand of democracy-"a democracy the people can understand," as he was fond of saying-he did not submit his presidency to a direct vote and he crippled his political opposition. He kept the right to censor the press and to promulgate laws at will

He was, nonetheless, relatively popular for most of his tenure. He instituted price controls, land reforms and domestic policies that strengthened and stabilized a shaky economy. He maintained martial law for four of his years in office and kept the army loyal

In foreign affairs, Marshal Ayub moved Pakutan away from the Western camp and an almost exclusive reliance on U.S. aid, and turned instead toward the Third World, including China.

A military man most of his life, Marshal Aşub was the first commander in chief of the Pakistani Army after the country won its independence in the British partition of India in 1947.

On Oct. 27, 1958, he assumed the presidency after deposing Iskander Mirza.

Declaring that his mission was "to bring the country back to sanity" after a series of unstable governments, he set up a military dictatorship. He ended martial law in 1962 and promulgated a constitution with sweeping presidential powers.

There were elections in 1960 and 1965 in which Pakistanis chose 80,000 local officials who. as electors, gave him an overwhelming vote of confidence and two successive five-year terms. In 1965, Pakistan and India fought a brief war over Kashmir. Although 10,000 lives were lost, the fighting was inconclusive. Marshal Ayub subsequently sign-

BRUSSELS. April 21 (Reuters). -Belgium appeared heading for a minority government today after negotiations to form a coalition ended in failure yesterday morn-

Premier-Designate Leo Tindemans admitted defeat following 23 hours of talks between his Christian Social party, the rightist Liberals and the country's two federalist parties.

Sources said that Mr. Tindemans, who has been trying to form an administration for the last month, would now try to form a cabinet with the Liberals. They said that any such administration was likely to be short-lived because the two parties won only 102 seats in the 212member National Assembly in the seats at a later date. A Christian Socialist-Liberal Socialist cabinet would be a recreation of the last administration, which collapsed in January after Iran pulled out of a project to build an oil refinery in castern Belgium.

March 10 elections. The Christian Socialists, the country's biggest political party, hoped that the Socialists would join the government with their 59

The Socialists, who were Mr. Tindemans's first choice as a coalition partner, still feel bitter toward their ex-partners.

The Socialists blame themespecially the Liberals-for torpedoing the refinery deal because they did not want the government to become involved in a project which they said should be left to private enterprise.

The Socialists negotiated with the Christian Socialists for three weeks after King Baudouin named Mr. Tindemans premier-designate before pulling out of the talks. The negotiations fell through

Poll on Runoffs

In another survey, voters were asked to choose between candidates in two possible runoffs-Mr. Mitterrand and Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and Mr. Mitterrand and Mr. Chaban-Delmas.

NEW YORK, April 21 (AP).-Twenty-one college students calling themselves the Attica Brigade left the Statue of Liberty early yesterday morning after occupying the landmark for 14 hours in a demonstration against President Nixon.

A spokesman said the group, which claims chapters at about 50 colleges and universities around the country, said its members wanted to publicize a planned anti-Nixon march on Washington Saturday. Assistant U.S. attorney Thomas Cahill said. "There are no charges, criminal or civil," against the 14 men and seven women, since they left the statue voluntarily.

The group took its name in memory of 43 persons who died in a four-day revolt at Attica State Prison near Buffalo, N.Y., in September, 1971.

The Kompong Luong beachhead, 23 miles from Phnom Penh, had been reinforced with 20 armored vehicles and four 105-mm cannons. A number of armored personnel carriers were destroyed but it was not known if the guns were still operating when they were abandoned.

sources said. The troops on the beachhead and in the Longvek vehicle re-pair facility just to the north were originally sent to retake Oudong, the 17th-century former royal capital that fell a month ago. Oudong is 20 miles northwest of Phnom Penh. A Western military observer said the withdrawal from the beachhead represented a major defeat for the government, and an Asian diplomat said, "There is no way to withdraw the troops from around Oudong; they must fight to the death."

The government's only option to save the troops and armor around Oudong would be to mount a major navy operation to reinforce the beachhead or onen Highway 5 to the beleaguered garrison, Highway 5 is controlled by the rebels for 10 miles south of the beachhead. No rescue operations have been planned, according to diplomatic sources.

Cairo Arrests ${\it Leader, Others.}$ In School Attack

CAIRO, April 21 (UPI).—The leader of the Arab organization that attacked the Technical Mil-itary Academy Thursday had close contacts with the Libyan authorities, Cairo newspapers said

They named the group that carried out the attacks as the Islamic Liberation Organization, and said it was led by Saleh Abdullah Sariya, a 38-year-old Palestinian who holds Libyan and Iraqi passports. The news-paper Al Ahram said, he was arrested Friday at the Alexandria rall terminal as he was about to leave the country. About 70 others were arrested yesterday, the paper said.

A statement issued by the state prosecutor's office yesterday said the leader of the operation, whom it did not name, was an Iraqi passport holder who received anti-Egyptian directives in Libya late last year.

"Toward the end of 1973, he went to Libya at the invitation of its government to discuss the formation of resistance units in the Arab countries and arrange for their financing."

Russians Trv Price Appeal On Plethora of Drab Goods

MOSCOW, April 21 (NYT).-The Soviet Ministry of Trade. eaught with huge backlogs of unsold consumer goods for the domestic market has resorted to a nationwide spring clearance sale to overcome customer resistance in goods that have passed out of

The ministry announced a 40-10-50-percent price cut on clothing items produced before 1973 in an effort to dispose of them. In Moscow slope, 60 stores were reported taking part in the nation's first large clearance sale in

The need to use such tactics teffects not only the inefficiency of the Soviet consumer industry but also the increasing sophistication of Soviet consumers, especially in the big cities.

Periodically, Soviet newsuapers report on the consumers' refusal to buy shoddy, drab clothes, shoes and other items that clog the Soviet retail network. "When you drop into a store. you will see an abundance of 2000s." Pravda quoted a Muscovite as having sald. "But when you begin to choose shoes, a suit, clothing. you find very often that they are not selling what you need."

A few menths back, the Communist party newspaper disclosed that many millions of paus of shoes had remained unsold in a five-year period because customers found them should and unetylish. It said that 24 million radios were sitting on slicives because the market had been aturated, and what people really wanted were hi-fi sets, almost impossible to fied.

Some officials were optimistical--( ly predicting a brisk trade in marked-down items, on which the Trade Ministry said it was prepared to absorb a $1.5-billion loss. Minister of Trade A. I. Etruyev said that sale items had been moving well since Monday in Leningrad, Minsk, Tbilisi and

Easy Victory for Nationalists Seen in South African Vote

PRETORIA, South Africa, April 21 (AP).—Weak challengers to the right and left have virtually no hope of defeating Prime Minister Jon Vorster in a general clection Wednesday.

Mr. Vorster's powerful Nationalist party has held office for 26 years. One sign of its continuing strength is that experts expect to assess results of the voting, not in terms of whether the "Nats" are re-elected, but by how badly the opposition is trounced and how they react to yet another defeat.

Sir de Villiers Grauff has led the main opposition United party for 18 years and to defeat in four carlier elections. He is expected to resign if his divided party is crushed for a fifth time.

Peking, Tokvo Sign Air Pact; Taiwan Bans Japan Flights

By Fox Butterfield

TOKYO, April 21 (NYT) .-After months of controversy Japan signed an aviation agreement with China yesterday, setting up flights between the two countries. But in retaliation Talwan immediately banned Japanese planes from its airspace and cut off their right to land in Taipei.

Taiwan's swift response, which had been publicly threatened for weeks but still unexpected here. appeared to seriously jeopardize the political standing of Premier Kakuci Tanaka and foreign min-teer Masayoshi Ohira, one of Mr. Tanaka's closest supporters.

For Mr. Ohira, who had led the drive to conclude the air accord with Peking despite bitter opposition within his own ruling Libert I-Democratic party, had pledged to sign the agreement only if the route to Taiwan was simultaneously preserved.

Ammunition to Rivals "This is going to give Premier Tanaka's rivals in the party a lot of ammunition," an associate of Mr. Tanaka remarked tonight.

"It is a very bad deg."

Mr. Tanaka and Mr. Ohira met with party and government leaders late into the evening and again today in an effort to find some way to persuade Taivan to reconsider its action. But of-ficials said they concluded there was no immediate solution. Both Japan Air Lines and

Taiwan's China airime immediately canceled their flights last night and today from Tokyo to Taipei following the announcement of Tanyan's action by Chinese Nationalist Foreign Minister Shen Chang-huan. In addition, a spokesman here for China Arrhues said it was already in the process of closing its Tokyo office and transferring its air cargo to other airlines. Japan Air Lines had 37 flights week to Taipel carrying an sterage of 30,000 passengers a mouth, while China Airlines had 21 flights a week. The route had been Japan Air Lines' most lucrative one, earning 10 percent of the company's annual revenue. The new accord with Peking.

wnich has been under negotiation for a year and a hall, represents a commercial breakthrough for China, since under it China will now have the right to fly to Tokyo and Oraka in Japan and then on to seven other locations in Canada, the United States and Latin America, of which only Vancouver and Ottawa were specified.

Under the agreement Japan Air Lines will be able to fly to Peking and Shanghai and then on to the Middle East and Europe via either India or Pakistan, it Japan can arrange landing rights in either of those countries. The accord must still be ratified by the Japanese legislature, where it will probably be introduced next

The opposition parties all support the agreement. But rightwing members of Premier Tanaka's own party were expected to oppose R

Amnesty Issue Still Splits U.S.

By Linda Charlton

WASHINGTON (NYT).—"These men should be tried as they are captured and then executed for their traitorous actions." "All we were guilty of was premature morality."

"There wouldn't be one of them that would hesitate to bear arms if it was a matter of protecting their country."

All three speakers—a Baptist minister from Florida, a young exile in Toronto, the mother of a draft evader who is now in Singapore-were talking about the same thing: amnesty.

Although the Vietnam war ended, for Americans, more than a year ago, the first full-scale congressional review of this issue. held this winter, demonstrated that the question of amnesty for draft evaders and deserters is still a Vietnam battleground.

Partly because it is, as the hearings demonstrated, still so divisive an issue, it is unlikely that there will be any action in Congress this year. But for the thousands of young men who would be affected, and for their families and friends, it is a matter of desperate personal importance, just as it is one of great moral significance to those groups that have adopted the

Variety of Bills

Congressional bills on the subject of amnesty range from those that would unconditionally remove penalties imposed on anyone involved in activities protesting the Vietnam war to resolutions condemning the granting of any sort of amnesty to anyone. In between are proposals that would lift the penalties for certain offeders under certain conditions, such as the performance of alternative nonmilitary service for their country.

Amnesty does not, as President Nixon and many others have said, mean forgiveness. Its roots lie in the Greek word for forgetting, a linguistic irony in the light of the angry, bitter feelings that the issue itself arouses.

The minister who recommended trial and execution to Rep. Robert Kastenmeir, D-Wis., who is chairman of the House Judiciary subcompilities that held three days of hearings on proposed amnecty legislation in March, was one of about 4,000 persons who have written the subcommittee. amnesty than opposed it.

The letters include torrents of abuse describing draft evaders and deserters as traitors, shirkers and cowards. But others display a thoughtful distress, and still others an agonizing bitterness.

A man from Mount Vernon, N.T., who said that he had been drafted into the Army and lost both arms, both legs and one eye in Vietnam, wrote: "The draftdodgers had the same choice I had. They chose the other path. Why should they now be given another chance? Can I be given another chance? If amnesty is granted, every guy who fought in Vietnam will look like a Goddamned idiot."

A gentle answer came from Mrs. Peg Mullen, a "gold star mother," whose son Michael was killed in Vietnam four years ago. Urging the passage of unconditional amnesty legislation, Mrs. Mullen told the subcommittee: "If I am to believe that my son sacrificed his life for some higher ideal, if I am to receive any comfort for my son's death, then let me believe that he died so that some other mother's son, somewhere, might now come home."

Exiles in Canada

Mrs. Mullen, like the great majority of those working for amnesty, rejected the idea of conditional amnesty as implying voune men who fled the Army or the draft. The largest concentration of these exiles is now in Canada. There they are believed to total 10,500 to 15,000, although many of the exiles themselves put the figure much higher. The most vocal entles utterly reject conditional amnesty, Alan Kazmer a deserter who is now a copymiter for a Toronto advertising agency, said he would not accept conditional amnesty "if the condition were to carry four ounces of feathers across the "I'm not accepting anything that implies that we've done something wrong," he said. "The point of view that made us come to Canada has now become the prevailing view in the United States. So what do we have to repent? I'll start thinking about repenting when I see Spiro Agnew behind bars." Stanley Pietlock, one of the first of the draft exiles to become a Canadian citizen, teaches school in Toronto. He is under indictment for draft evasion in the United States. He said he might accept some condition for amnesty that he could meet during his summer break from teaching. "All we were guilty of was premeture morality." he said.

Mrs. Morrow carried a copy of the letter—"I wouldn't let the original get out of my hands." she said—when she came to Washington to be present, as a spectator, at the amnesty hear-

"I will not," her son wrote, a part of a policy which has no rational foundation yet articulated to me and which borders dangerously to crime against humanity. I hope you will understand."

Mrs. Morrow is convinced that amnesty will be granted eventually. "It's how long," she said. "We're not as young as we used to be."

For many proponents of amnesty, the issue has become a demand for vindication, for official admission of the war's im-

At the same time, the amnesty drive has become an attack on the military establishment. The demand for amnesty, in at least one bill, is coupled with a demand that all those young men-about 450,000 of them-who received less-than-honorable discharges during the Vietnam era, for no matter what reasons, be given honorable discharges. Others, such as that sponsored by Rep. Bella Abzug. D-N.Y., would extend unconditional amnesty "to all classes of essentially nonviolent resisters of the war, including not only draft evaders and deserters but auti-war demonstrators."

These demands are in no way appeased by conditional amnesty proposals such as that made by former Secretary of the Army Robert Fræhlke or the parallel "earned immunity" legislation sponsored by Sen. Robert Taft jr., R-Ohio. These proposals not only require an admission of guilt unacceptable to the proponents of unconditional amnesty, but also because of the large numbers of people said to be involved.

Just how large these numbers are is uncertain. The pro-amnerty groups generally claim higher estimates than others. figures used by Rep. Kastenmeier in his opening statement came from the Departments of Justice and Defense, and even they were not precise.

Prom 1963 to 1973, there were 206.775 men "referred to U.S. attorneys as draft-law delinquents," During the same decade, 19,000 were prosecuted and 9,167 convicted of draft-law violations. About 4,000 young men were prosecuted for desertion, and Pentagen estimates there are 23,000 deserters still at large, of whom about 10 percent are believed to be overseas.

Instances in History

Those who are calling for amnesty point to precedents: "There have been." Rep. Edward Koch, D-N.Y., told the subcommittee, "34 instances of amne ty in some form in American history." But others note that the parallels are not exact and that postwar "pardons" have al-ings: "These three days of hearings have shown grave differences over the issue. I just don't think we're close to resolving it, that's

Rep. Kastenmeier commented ways imposed conditions.

This is, of course, an election year, no time to be acting on controversial measures if the number of constituents directly affected is comparatively small And a knowledgeable subcommittee staff member describes the chances for action on any of the

"What I hate to see is this being a battle joined by two ideologies," said Rep. Koch, conceding that this is what has, in fact, happened. He favors unconditional amnecty for draft evaders and deserters but believes it is unrealistic to expect congressional troduced a bill providing for two years' civilian "alternative service" as a condition for amnesty. As a result, he said, he is the target of both sides.

Rep. Koch noted that publicopinion polls had shown a gradually increased acceptance of the notion of amnesty. A Louis Harris poll released shortly before the hearings began showed 45 percent in favor and 43 percent opposed. Last year, the response to the same question about conditional amnesty was 43 percent in favor and 49 percent opposed. A Gallup poll of about the same time showed that 46 percent of those polled would allow draftresisters to return on the basis of either military or civilian service. Only 29 percent, however, accepted the notion of unconditional amnesty. In the Earris survey, those in favor totaled

'Jus: Think—If We'd Supported Nixon We'd Be Misunderstood Young Idealists'

The concept of an unconditional amnesty is apparently difficult for most Americans to accent, but the attachment of some condition—a symbolic gesture satisfies most. It does not satisfy those groups that are flatly opposed — veterans' organizations such as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Young Americans for ministration. Nor does it appease the bulk of the organized pro-amnesty forces, which include church groups of all faiths, civil rights and civil liberties organizations, and a multitude of ad boc

Inner-City Crime Has Moved To the Suburbs in America

By Andrew H. Malcolm

SCHAUMBURG, III, (NYT).— same ball game. Just different Not long ago, this mush-rooming northwest Chicago suburo almost had its first homicide case. However, the body was found to be 14 feet inside the boundary of a neighboring suburb, so Schaumburg's murder state is still

But the incident illustrates a serious, though little noticed, fact of life in suburban America: Major crime, once associated only with the big cities, has also found presperous new home in the housing tracts and the shopping centers of the suburbs.

Preliminary 1973 figures, just issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, show that serious crimes rose 3 percent in cities and 5 percent nationally. In the suburbs, however, serious crimes jumped by 10 percent.

In the cities, violent crimes grew 3 percent. In the suburbs, they grew 13 percent. Aggravated assaults grew by 5 percent in the cities and 15 percent in the suburbs.

This steady development has seen once sedate suburban police departments boost their budgets, manpower and training, start nationwide recruiting drives, computerize crime and personnel records, undertake ambitious youth and crime-prevention programs and take tentative steps toward intersuburban cooperation, The reasons for the crime increase are varied and complex. but authorities say they stem primarily from the rapid growth of the suburbs, which, in effect, have become "outer cities." There are now, for instance, 75.6 million suburban residents and only 63.7 million city residents.

For years the cities have been considered crime-infested swamps where sidewalks were unsafe. This was an image-end in some cases a reality-that many dwellers fied from to the suburbs.

"It's been a fantastic charge," Martin Conroy, Schaumburg's postood at 5.1 percent of the work lice chief, said, "In the cities Those interviewed were asked:

There were no local ordinances then, so Mr. Conroy typed up some laws from other communities which Schaumburgians thought they might like enforced

Today, Schaumburg is the Chicago area's fastest-growing community. Its 25 souare miles support a population climbing through 35,000 on the way to a planned 230,000. The 52-year-old Mr. Conroy, who like many suburban policemen was once a bigcity cop, is chief of a 49-member department linked by a sophisticated radio network in a vehicular fleet that includes a $20,000 mobile crime lab.

acting to deal with it, The October war in the Middle East raises the same kind of questions for the Atlantic allies, for China, and for Japan. All are agreed in opposing Soviet begemony either in Europe or in Asia. Soviet domination of the Eurasian land mass would trans-form the world balance of power, and, therefore, threaten the territorial integrity and political in-dependence of each of these nations, and of many more as well, But European and American public opinion, Iulied by the soothing rhetoric of détente used by nearly all the allied govern-ments, is only dirally aware of the nature of recent events and of their implications.

At the moment, the West has too few political leaders in the spirit of Churchill and Truman, of Adenauer. De Gasperi, Acheson, Attlee, Schuman, and Monnet-men who trusted their people and were willing to offer them nothing but blood, sweat and tears. Detente with the Soviet Union—an agreement of peaceful coexistence, based respect for the Charter of the United Nations with regard to the use and threat of force in international relations—is a political condition the allies have sought through thick and thin since 1945, and even before that. must always be a major goal Western policy.

Goal Not Reached

As the October war and its aftermath demonstrate, however, this goal has not been reached. The Soviet role in the war was fundamental and deliberate. It cannot be reconciled with the Charter of the United Nations and the decisions of the Security Council nor with the promises Leonid Brezhnev made to President Nixon in the ill-fated detente agreement of May 29, 1973, In May, 1972, Mr. Brezhnev publicly assured the United States not only that the Soviet Union would generally abide by the rules of "peaceful coexistence." but that it would exert all its influence to achieve a diplomatic conflict in accordance with Secu-rity Council Resolution 242 of Nov. 22, 1967. That resolution was sponsored by the British government, and supported by a concerted Atlantic diplomacy achieved through consultations in which all the allies, including France, participated fully. Resolution 242 calls on the parties to reach an agreement of peace, pursuant to which Israel would withdraw from territories it occupled in the course of the sixday war to secure and recognized boundaries established by the agreement of peace. Because Egypt had violated the agreement with Israel negotiated in its behalf by the United States in 1957, Resolution 243 requires no Israeli withdrawals from the cease-fire lines until the parties concur in an overall agreement of peace, establishing security arrangements, including demilitarized zones; guarantees of maritime rights through all the international waterways of the region: and a just settlement of the refugee problem. This is the essence of the famous "packagedeal" of Resolution 342, which had-and hopefully still hasthe support of all the Atlantic allies, and of many other nations as well. In 1967, Soviet representatives said of Resolution 242 that it was the first time in the history of the cold war they used the phrase "pack-age deal" in a positive sense.

Soviet Role

Far from persueding Egypt and Syria to enter into the negotiations called for by Resolution 242, however, the Soviet Union spent six years, billions of dollars and the time of many thousands of its experts in training, equipping and organizing the Arab armies for the attack of Oct. 6, 1973. Even though Egypt's President Anwar Sadat cleared Soviet troops out of Egypt in 1972, many Soviet military men participated in the war, not as frontline troops, but as operators of highly sophisticated military technology and as planners. The Soviet Union gave the war its full diplomatic support and even urged distant Arab states to enter the fray. The Soviet Union refused even to discuss a cease-fire until it was clear that Israel had won the war.

The Soviet plan was to exploit Arab hostility to the existence of Israel as the detonator of a war. which would produce irreversible change in the area and thus make the Arab states completely dependent on Soviet protection. It is not difficult to imagine the series published in the Interna-tional Herald Tribune on the problems and differences of Europe-U.S. relations. The series being coordinated by Joseph moral shock to Western opinion if the war had resulted in the destruction of Israel.

The October war could not have taken place without Soviet backing, which offered Arab leaders the irresistible appeal of undoing what they regarded as the injustice of the long chain of events flowing from the Balfour Declaration. It was the most serious and fundamental Soviet thrust of the entire postwar period against the Atlantic alliance
—a bold and carefully prepared attempt to neutralize Europe, dismantle NATO, and drive the United States out of the Mediter-ranean and Europe itself. If the great are from Morocco to Iran were brought under Soviet control, the allied forces arrayed in Europe would be outflanked, and in peril. With the oil and space the region in Soviet hands, the fate of Europe, Russians thought, would be settled. What was at stake in the October war was therefore infinitely more serious than the possible outcome of earlier cold war confrontations over secondary issues like Iran, Greece, Turkey, Berlin or Cuba. The October war was not a tac-tical but a strategic move, aimed at the heart of the alliance.

The October war should therefore be perceived as a Pearl Harbor, a flash of lightning revealthe nature of Soviet policy in all its grimness. It dramatized a threat to the security of the aliles which can only be met if they act together with the greatest possible energy, imagination and urgency. They have a little time in which to concert their policy, thanks to the victory of Israeli arms, backed by the staunch diplomacy of the United States, with the assistance of Portugal and, less visibly, of others among the allies.

But this brief allowence of time will do the allies no good if it

Are the allies rallying in harmony to meet the common dan-Or are they treating the October war as Britain treated the occupation of the Rhineland This is the concern behind the American government's vigorous recent efforts to persuade the allies to develop concerted Atlantic policies on a long list of fundamental problems which affect their security and prosperity as directly, and as vitally, as the possibility of invasion by land across the central front in Ger-

Since Suez, the allies have often differed on a number of political. security and economic questions not directly affecting the central front. The United States is now convinced that the comfortable pattern of intermittent allied dissonance which has prevailed since Suez is no longer tenable as a basis for policy. In this, the American government is clearly right. The rising level of Soviet pressure makes that pattern a luxury we can no longer afford. This is not a time for mutual recriminations about the many mistakes and missed opportunities of the last 25 years. Each of the allies has made mistakes, many of them serious, all of them painful. It is a psychological reality that each of these blunders left behind a residue of resentment which affects the politics of the alliance

Positive Memories

But the allies are bound together by other and more positive memories. They worked together successfully to build NATO, restore Europe and develop a far-reaching and progressive Western economy, on which their own prosperity, and that of many other nations, depends. They should approach the issues of the day in the spirit of that set of memories, and with full awareness of the fact-and it is a fact which no one can alterthat they share an indivisible destiny, which can be protected only if they work together.

In the nuclear age, the semrity of Europe requires the per-manent cooperation of the United States and its European allies. None of the economic problems of the industrialized world can be dealt with except through the cooperation of the OECD members, and a number of other nations, including the oil producers and other developing nations. The degree of integration of the OECD economy means that the main economic problems of the worldwide Western economy are now beyond the reach of any nation or group of nations acting alone, no matter how powerful,

Political Issues

Different combinations of nations are required to deal with the main political problems of the world—those which are universal, like the control of nuclear weapons; and those which are regional, like the security of Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin

One of the most urgent of these political issues is the enforcement of the Security Comcil's binding decision of Oct. 22, 1973, that the parties to the Middle Eastern conflict must negotiate a just and durable peace, in accordance with Resolution 342. The Oct. 22 resolution is the most constructive single step ever taken by the international community in the conflict over Israel's right to exist. The chances of fulfilling the mandate of that resolution would be enhanced if the process of carry-ing out the Security Council's decision is backed by the concerted influence of the Atlantic allies, which was decisive in achieving Resolution 242 in 1967. Peace between Israel and its neighbors will not alone assure the interests of the alliance in the Middle East. But no program for safeguarding those interests can succeed unless the Security Council decision of Oct. 22, 1973, is obeyed. The nature of Soviet foreign policy, and the implacable problem of nuclear deterrence, have rendered many ideas obsolete. In 1949, many people, both in Europe and in America, thought once Europe was unified, American forces could be with-drawn. Europe could then take over its own defense and participate in world affairs as a strong and independent polity, well disposed to the United States and Canada, to be sure, but an autonomous third force between the Soviet Union and the United States nonetheless. The idea was just as attractive in the United States as it was in Europe, for it seemed to offer the United States an opportunity to withdraw from dangerous entanglements in foreign quarrels, and return to a stance far more congenial to the notions America has inherited about the rightful role of the nation in world politics. This nostalgic yearning for America's isolated past is the powerful force behind the proposals of Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont, and others to withdraw American conventional forces from Europe

and the Mediterranean Neither Has Place

Neither American isolationism nor the concept of a third-force Europe has a legitimate place in the world of 1974. The security of Europe requires the indefinits presence of American forces in and near Europe, to make sure that nuclear deterrence remains credible and so that in a limited crisis the allied governments would not face the choice between abandoning a vital interest and using the nuclear weapon. The degree of integration of the European and North American economies reinforces this principie. If there is to be any of curing the cancer of inflation, and maintaining a reasonable rate of economic growth, the Atlantic economy must be managed as a unit, by methods of cooperation which would have seemed utopian only five years

But men cling tenaciously to the ideas of their past. The isolationist impulse is still strongin the United States. And in Europe some still contend that Europe must choose between the principle of a "European Europe," and that of an "American Evrope." There is no such choice. For reasons rooted in the nature of things, there can be no Europe except an Atlanic Europe, just as there can be no America except an Atlantic America, On that footing and only on that footing, both Europe and America can retain their separate and altogether authentic personalities.

If the October war and its consequences do not convince European and American opinion that Atlantic solidarity is the rock on which their future must be built, we have lost our instinct. for political reality.

It is not only their departmental status which makes these French islands so important politically to Paris.

Gen. Charles de Gaulle thought highly of the islands' "fidelity." Premier Pierre Messmer, a former minister for overseas departments, and the Gaullists were thankful for the 200,000 or so overseas votes that saved them from defeat in the 1967 parliamentary elections.

The islanders, however, are far from happy with their present status. A bandful want independence, believing that thev could make it as members of some Caribbean grouping or with U.S. help. The majority are divided between "departementalistes" and "autonomistes," with even the former seeking more decentralization.

French administration, with its -prefects, sub-prefects, military commanders, gendarmes, riot police and a small army of bureaucrats, weighs heavily on local shoulders.

Until recently, the islands' prefects hved like latter-day governors, and a visiting Parisian described a reception at the prefect's mansion at Saint-Claude. of Louis XIV.

In speeches, Mr. Delferre told attentive crowds that they should force: what was in the left's program and listen instead to a special message from Mr. Mitterrand, which he proceded to read. It stressed the historical links between France and the islands. Mr. Defferre added that Prance had no right to abandon the islands, and that a leftist regime in France would give the islanders "security and dignity" and put an end to "the rule of officials appointed by Paris."

By security, he meant a new effort to push industry, for the islands' economies are suffering seriously from competition from French sugarbeet growers and sinking banana prices. A big effort has been made to exploit the tourist potential and thousands of new hotel rooms are under construction, particularly on the golden strip outside Pointe-a-Pitre in Guadeloupe. Landing fields, golf courses and marinas are being built for rich vacationers.

Vote Left

Mr. Cesaire is happy with the Mitterrand plan and is telling the people to vote for the leftist candidate and his revised policy. He stated: "I am still for au-tonomy. Mitterrand is neither for n nor against it, but we will vote for him because a directly-elected local assembly will enable us to choose our future status. I think Muttetrand really wants decen-"barons" of the Gaullist party who have ties with the big families here.

Radio Free Europe Researchers Take Pulse of Soviet Bloc

By David Haworth
MUNICH. 11HT .- The effective working of what is perhaps the West's most extensive analyeis operation concerned with trends and events in Easiern Europe—the research department of Radio Free Europe—is being threatened by lack of funds.

Action by the U.S. Congreshas caused a 12 percent reduction in RFE's staff in recent months and, while trying to lend off accusations by Sen. William Fulbright that the whole institu-tion is "a cold-war relic," RFE will shortly launch a campaign for contributions from European

Its executives propose that the operational costs for running the broadcasting side of RFE's activities should continue to be covered by the United States, but European governments, institu-tions and businesses should be ersuaded to help with the rest of ils budget.

The research department has existed ever since RFE first went on the air in 1950 and is regarded as a uniquely comprehensive record of life in Communist countries. It currently employs 63 fulltime researchers, most of whom have at various times fled their native countries in the Soviet bloc. Their work, evidenced mainly in monthly reports and background papers, has been praised by academics and politicians throughout the West-not least by President Nixon, who admits to a "long-standing and unreserved admiration for the job RFE is doing." adding that it is "indispensable to more normal rela-tions between East and West and to better prospects for an enduring neace."

The research department grewgrounds that intelligent and informed programs to the Eastern blor necessitated up-to-date knowledge of RPE's "target area" on a daily basis.

During the last 15 years the department's scope has changed considerably. From being merely a "passive" adjunct to the broad-casting, it has steadily developed its own identity and now suggests topics for programs, backing these up with facts and interpretation. Interested bodies outside RFE, including Communist chents, began to make increasing numbers of requests for the department's material. There are now more than 1.000 subscribers worldwide to its output which they receive free of charge, paying only the postal

Its main source of information to the Eastern European press to-self. Every publication—ranging from national and regional newsnapera to specialist magazine and even papers concerned with pop music and sporte-is meticulously sifted for material.

Thus, RFE takes about 178 pubheattons from Czechoslovakie, more than 100 from Poland and 80 from Bulgaria, In addition, it monitors all radio programs eman, ting from the East and reports on them.

While much of this monitored material is arid propagandizing. the expert knows what is genuine news, has learned to read between the lines of Communist oflicialese and regards no detail as too trivial to provide a useful clue to life and events "on the other side. as they ear.

Already, he said, the problem facing his department is not lack of material, but lack of staff

He maists there can be no further lavoffs without the quality of work beginning to suffer.

Details on Officials

A tour of the department gives some idea of the depth of re-search. In the Polish section, for vample, there are more than 150,000 index cards, nearly half of which are personal cords recording biographical details of leading past and present government and Communist party officials.

On one batch of cards, as thick as a fist, is the 20-year history of Poland's largest steel plant from its launching with Soviet aid to us current production. There are files en the police, en old-age pensioners, architecture, the Roman Catholic Church, water conservation, foreign relations and even gastronomy.

The director of RFE's Polish research section, Kammierz Za-morski, author of a book on Sovict justice who never returned to his homeland after World War II. said: "It's interesting that the regime officially acknowledges that there are such things as ju-tende delinquency and prostitution in Poland, but no Polish "This sort of painstaking work authority will admit that un-

This core of activity is, he said, "Benediction work," but claimed that he and his staff here on in attable aprelicerual distante for Marxism Another aspect of DFE: research effort is what he called fero-s-reporting. By monitor-ing all Communist racio difficus the department is able to leed news back into the Sourt block informing listeners of what is coing on in a neighborine Com-monist country. As a matter of Communical policy, very little of "hat goes on in one Eastern European country is broadcast to another. The public in each satelling country is: inerefore, almost as poorly in-formed of what goes on in other Warsam Pact nation, as it is about happenings in the West

During the last 19 years the fact that all the Communist states, despite videly differing backgrounds, here many problems in common and that what is happening in one may be of coaderable interest to an audience in others has found a growing reflection in RFE's output.

A research paper on Hungarian intellectuals will provide program incterial for the other RFE national services, as will an analyas of the crowing anti-Cinnese campaign in Czechoslovakia or the problems of the Turkish innotify in Bulgatia or reports of Romania's interventions at the Geneta conference on East-West

Some Are More Equal

"We convene as equals," Henry Kissinger told the delegates to the general assembly of the Organization of American States, meeting in Atlanta. And, doubtless, everyone present recognized, and many resented. that some are more equal than others, with the United States outweighing all, including huge Brazil, in present wealth and power, How then, many Latin Americans ask (much as France asks in Europe), can there be the partnership for which the secretary of state appealed?

In the Americas, as in Europe, much of the answer must come from Washington. Mr. Rissinger sought to give that answer when he said that the old notion that the United States was uniquely equipped by technology and resources to reshape the Americas no longer prevailed: that modern forces and ideas had revolutionized the two continents and the United States accepted that fact.

To some Latin American countries, notably and articulately Argentina, the test of this acceptance may well seem to lie in Washington's policies toward Castro's Cuba. Certainly since the Bay of Pigs, the United States has seemed to be "he principal opponent of Castroism, and Castro has capitalized on this to represent his government as the great upholder of Latin American independence. But in practical terms, the antagonism has diminished so substantially, and relations between Moscow and Washington -whose own confrontation over the Cuban issue during the missile crisis was the most dramatic example of the potentials of that issue—have so improved that there is much to be said for the Argentinian characterization of Cuba's continuing isolation as "unrealistic and anachronistic,"

In fact, there is rather more than a possibility that the United States would find Cuba less of a problem on practical matters (with the exception of the question of the U.S. presence at the Guantanamo Bay naval base; than Argentina itself, where the tempestuous nature of the Peronist government, and the domestic turmoil there, creates chronic headaches for industrialists and diplomats.

But by no means every Latin American country would be happy to restore Cuba to full membership in the American community. Although Latin America, as Mr. Kissinger said, has been revolutionized, each country has its own political version of the revolution, and looks askance at those of its neighbors. Cuba has become a symbol of the most complete form of revolution, one which it has exported with zeal, and many states would prefer to apply some kind of tariff to that kind of trade. As in Europe, there are differences within the community that do not stem from Washington.

But apart from Cuba, there is still much that the Americas can do to foster mutual help, and to find for the Western Hemisphere the means of cooperating with the larger community that Mr. Kissinger described so eloquently before the United Nations. For as he also pointed out in Atlanta, if blocs of nations become too self-centered. they can be self-defeating. The United States is part of the Americas—and it is also part of the world. And the same applies to all the countries represented in Atlanta, as well as to those American nations-Cuba and, for quite different reasons, Canada-

Catch 266,000,000

South Victnam's President Thieu must be heartened at the degree of carelessness conveniently exposed in some Pentagon accounting office.

Dismay was mounting in Saigon-and at the Department of Defense-that South Vietnam's war effort might have to be sharply curtailed in the coming weeks if the United States did not provide an extra $474 million in military aid for the period through June 30. The administration's lobbyling for this supplemental appropriation was accompanied by a smear campaign, led by the American ambassador in Saigon, Graham Martin, to imply that those hesitating to support President Thieu wholeheartedly could only be dupes of Hanoi

Wisely resentful of these tactics and fearful of new open-ended commitments in South Vietnam, Congress blocked the new request early this month. Upon that unexpected rebuil, the Defense Department suddenly came up with a previously overlooked $266 million on its books, appropriated by Congress long ago in connection with the Vietnam war but somehow never spent. Key congressional leaders, reluctant to go on record as voting more funds for President Thieu but equally fearful of later recriminations if Salgon's forces fared badly, seem ready to suspend normal disbelief at the fortuitousness of this accounting discovery and let the money go to Saigon.

The whole issue of American military support for the South Vietnamese regime will come up for thorough airing in connection with next fiscal year's budget request. Meanwhile it seems perfectly proper to wonder why an unexpected windfall of $266 million has to be applied so casually to the account of President Thieu-rather than, for instance, more generous education, job training or health benefits for three million American veterans of the Vletnam war.

Women of Rome

The Roman Catholic archdiocese of Boston has asked a nun to resign her position as one of its religious counselors at Boston University, a non-Catholic institution, because she led women students in a religious service that in some respects approximated a mass. In the Catholic church, only priests can say mass and only men can become priests.

Whatever the merits or outcome of the particular episode in Boston, it does highlight the changing trends of thought about the role of women in the church. The tradition that only men could become priests developed because Jesus Christ and his apostles were all men. Yet, today a great many younger theologians see no doctrinal obstacle to the ordination of women to the priesthood. In their view, the male priesthood is based on social custom rather than theological imperative.

However, when Pope Paul VI in 1972 approved a reform of the so-called minor orders, which a candidate for the priesthood takes on his way toward his final ordination, the forces of tradition prevailed in Rome. The new decree reaffirmed that only men could be admitted to any of these orders.

The effect of this decree is to make more difficult any gradual transition toward sexual equality in the priesthood. Women, except in unusual circumstances, cannot serve the lesser offices of deacon and reader; nor can girls assist the priest at mass, a function reserved for what are usually and significantly called "altar boys." Yet some Protestant denominations long ago admitted women to the ministry, and the pressures toward complete sexual equality in the secular world have evoked comparable stirrings among Catholics.

A church that has always elevated its heroic women to sainthood is not likely to resist indefinitely admitting them to the

Latin for the EEC

Those two Dutch members of parliament who suggested that Latin should be adopted as the official language of the European community were—they later admitted—not serious: nevertheless, the idea, fantasy though it may be, has its attractions. It would get rid of the French-English linguistic rivalry for one thing; and by clothing the EEC's dissensions in the decent obscurities of a learned tongue it would lend needed dignity to an unhappy state of friction.

Mr. James Callaghan is discussing the future of the Common Market with the other community foreign ministers in Bonn this weekend. Let's hope the wise and powerful words of Sir Michael Clapham are ringing in his ears. Loud and clear.

Withdrawal from Europe, says Sir Michael, president of the Confederation of British Industry, "would be absolute disaster." Britain would lose free access to a vast market and be gradually squeezed out of others. It is one thing to talk about renegotiating terms. It is quite another to carry on with this dangerous threat that at this stage we will-or even can-opt out.

The Declining Birthrate in the U.S.

By James Reston

WASHINGTON. - The birthrate in the United States. according to the government's National Center for Health Statistics, has now dropped to its lowest point in history, and judging by the bare fects all around us, this is not because sex has gone out of style.

The government, which somehow keeps track of these things, tells us, with all of the emotion of the multiplication table, that "the national fertility rate," whatever that means, dropped in 1973 to 1.9 children per family thave you ever tried to raise nine. tenths of a little boy), and that there were 3,141,000 births or thereabouts last year, the lowest number since 1945. Also, the of-ficials tell us that if the trend of more sex and fewer babies goes on like this, the population of the United States will "level off" to "zero growth" sometime in "the first half of the 21st

On the whole, this is good news. Already we are producing more people than we can understand or govern, and our mental growth obviously leveled off long ago. Our bodies are running ahead of our minds, and while our record is better than most nations, we cannot quite find enough money, jobs, schools, houses, or transportation to keep up with the fertility of our people.

Going Up

So apparently the people have decided to adjust themselves to the governmer', which is a switch. All the other governmen tables are going up-prices, unemployment, interest rates, crime, even rape (which is odd con-sidering the availability of sex), but the population index is going

The interesting thing about this, of course, is not the statistics but the philosophy, not whether this is a good or a bad thing, but why? Never has any society advertised and glorified ex as much as America and shot so many blanks. George Gallup suggests some of the reasons for the decline in the birthrate, "including the cost of living, particularly the cost of education, widespread use of contraceptives, concern over crowded conditions and overpopulation, more liberal abortion laws, and changing values and lifestyles as reflected by woman's liberation."

He could probably have added to his list: the uncertainty of life in America today, the decline in respect for the authority of the family and the church; the doubt whether the young want to repeat the hard work and the experience of their parents; the widespread acceptance of divorce; the easy satisfaction of sex and entertainment; in short, the increasing freedom and mobility of the young and their hesitation to commit themselves to anyone or anything for life. "Live it up, and Gallup, when he looked into all this, confirmed the obvious. Producing and raising five or six kids was a bit of a tussle, and eight or nine even on the old farm was unthinkable. Two children, he found, were about right, but only one was a problem both for the parents and the child. All responsibility for the old folks and no help from the other kids.

Harder Question What Gallup's poll did not deal with is the increasing number of couples, married and unmarried, who want no children at all. My favorite family reporter. Russell Baker, has been out at the University of Colorado. running away from Watergate, and tossing around life with the undergraduates.

He found, if I heard him right, that the topic of sex, married or otherwise, was old stuff. The young pretended that it was an appetite that could be satisfied as naturally as eating or breathing, which is a lie, but anyway they were much more interested and concerned about the larger problem of commitment to a life of raising children. "Do you take this child for better or for worse, till death do you part?" That is a harder question, even in these days of disbelief, than "Do you take this man?" You cannot divorce your child but you can avoid the problem. You can do what you like, free at last to have and to hold until something better turns up. No promises either way. "Who gives this woman? Who takes this pill?"

The trend toward smaller families and even toward planned spinsterhood has some obvious advantages for society as a whole. eases the nightmare of doubling the population every 40 years and makes the problem of planning and governing life in the current trend. For the young seem to be longing for something to believe in these days, and the family is probably the last refuge they have.

On the one hand the argument is made that this is a rotten and dangerous world, full of wars, crooks, crime, and dope, so why subject one more soul to its brutality? On the other hand, if it is true, as charged, that the preachers are not to be believed, the politicians not to be trusted,

And yet there may be a paradox and society as a whole is a jungle of lies and tricks, then the family with all its struggles, is still about the best bet available. Maybe even better than being liberated into loneliness.

One day the government statisticians may expand their efforts and measure not only the GNP and the population but the growth of happiness. Meanwhile the latest figures are reassuring. If we can't handle the people we've got, why double the prob-

CAIRO.—I have had a letter from a Soviet official who asks that I protect him by refraining from descriptive information. He alludes to himself as in opposition to the existing Moscow regime, not from the viewpoint of a Solzhenitsyn but, as he puts it, from the viewpoint of "free-thinking men who stand for our system but want to make it a really socialistic and Soviet one." What, he inquires, can be the "hidden motive" of the West -which believed itself in great danger from Moscow when it wasn't-in now assuming it is "safe in the face of growing Soviet military supremacy over America? I cannot myself perceive the rea-sons behind this illogic." He then lists weaknesses in the West today: an expanding eco-nomic crisis plus "political disruptions both in the sphere of Western inter-relations and with-in many a Western major power." What, he asks, might Moscow be tempted to do "in Yugoslavia after Tito, in Spain after Franco, not speaking about Italy, already in a state close to the situation we had in Russia between Febru-ary and October of 1917? Our leaders must think in terms of a pre-revolutionary condition."

And America...?

Comrade X reasons: "For both sides the talks on SALT seem to rations for a time of turmoil facing Western Europe. I know what the Soviet Union might do if conditions of civil war should arise in Europe. Could you presume what America would "I am not a partisan of the order of things existing in the Western world. What I am afraid of, as a Soviet Russian patriot, is that-confronted with a Vietnam-like situation in Europe-America might react; and I fear that the first shots would come from America's side. I await with great interest your reactions, You may refer, if you wish, to the considerations I brought to your attention but without any disclosure of my authorship." Comrade X implies there was no reason to fear direct invasion of Europe from Russia in the late 1940s. Yet he does think Stalin would have moved to preserve order in case of civil violence promoted in that area by local Communists: that such a possibility was frustrated by the presence of American troops.

At the same time, he thinks Western confidence in détente is an illusion, unwarranted by the fact of Soviet military preparations. He believes that there are imminent political changes in Italy and that after the deaths of the present leaders, in Yugoslavia and Spain, new revolutionary conditions might be followed up by some form of sure what America would do to prevent this—even to the extent of firing "the first shots."

The puzzlement thus expressed seems to be a slightly distorted mirror image of similar confusion in the West. This lack of conon both sides-is surely one of the greatest obstacles to advance toward world stability. And, whatever else one might say, skepticism is now encouraged by the explosion of new violence in the Middle East, the shipment of new arms supplies there by the superpowers, and the indication that SALT negotiations have reached a new phase of stalemate.

Observations On Nixon And Taxes

By William Buckley Jr.

NEW YORK—I am everywhen informed that Mr. Nixon has suffered grievously on account of the tax delinquency. On the other hand—in almost every case—I am being told about other people's indignation. I wonder whether it is a synthetic indigna-tion: whether, in fact, it is a matter of everybody knowing how: everybody else feels, while per-sonally exempt from that same feeling. What is true is that a lot of people are taking pleasure from Mr. Nixon's reversals.

A great deal is to be learned from what becomes now the aga of Mr. Nixon's taxes, concern which a few observations:

I have nowhere seen any explanation for the faller to consummate the gift of his vice-presidential papers. It isn't as though by waiting past that critical date in July he might have hoped to enhance the value of the contribution. And then was plenty of warning that July 25 might be the effective date after which deductions would not be permitted. So what happened I can think of no other explana tion than extraordinary misman agement by Mr. Nizon's book

2 That raises the question whether the so-called back. dating was oftensive to the more sense. What it evidently was was illegal. But illegal only in the purely formal sense. It non-effective. I give you en example. Suppose you telephone your lawyer on June 1 and so to him: I have decided to will my estate to my daughter. The you leave town for two months On your return, the lawyer brings you your will to sign. How should it be dated? June I, or August 1? I am sure that testamentary experts have an answer to this question, very likely different answers in different ferent places. It could make a great deal of difference in En. gland, for instance. There a gift, for example, is taxed at a different rate if turned over less than three years before the donor's death, so that it matters a great deal just when the "con-structive" gift was made. Let the luwyers make the decision in a great deal just when the "conthe individual case. Suffice to asset say, meanwhile, that there is every reason to suppose that Mr Nixon made the constructive gill well before the deadline, and that he is now paying close to a half million dollars extra tax on account of the extravagant inefficiency of his stuff.

The whole argument about Nixon having paid fewer taxes than the local plumber is are very good arguments again a public official laving claim papers he accumulated while in public service, and if I had to vote, it would be that said pap are public property. But that is not how they have been treated For at least a generation, preidents have kept their papers and turned them over, often with tax benefits, to whomever the chose. FDR didn't consult congress about the resting place in his papers, neither did Rome Truman, LBJ, the estate of John Kennedy. Accordingly, the fute: over the Nixon papers is in the and I don't like that, and neither should the people; and who knows, maybe they don't, really.

Though one is helpless on the matter of the little items, one wonders, really, if there are say limits to pettifoggery. If you retain a bookkeeper to keep 22 of all deductible expenses, that is what the bookkeeper is going to do. And if you donate a bag of salted peanuts to the church bazaar, it is the bookkeeper's responsibility to figure out that a bag of salted peanuts is worth and to take a deduction which you may not even be await of To suggest that the man the does this is a Scrooge, scheming to screw the exchequer, is qui simply naive. Now if the dedution is for some reason improper that then is disallowed. It is a singular vice of the tax spice that this is not an open and shut question. It is often a value question: like whether Tricks party was really a family still or really a public affair, or half and half, or one-quarter and three-quarters or whatever Everybody has a chance to signif his case with the tax com-Except Mr. Nixon, who is in general bind and is losing is freedom of action. 'Moved' by Nixon

Retired diplomats are rarely moved by politicians but President Nixon succeeds where others fail. What other president, I wonder, could have made a Roman holiday of the French President's ordeal and death, flaunting American power with the Russians in the capital whose traditional antipathy to meaningless summitry was weakened by national shock and disarray and then grinning and mugging at crowds foolish enough to let alien cameras exploit the shallow enthusiasms of a spring afternoon? His bad taste will do little to mend his shattered reputation at home and nothing to honor the United States in the eyes of Frenchmen who count on our

One may at least hope that the imperial advisers will draw their togus over their blushes and reflect on the deterioration of European-American relations which their chief's conduct has so heavily underlined. Here we are, of the Atlantic alliance by snariing at one another over European unity and French leadership. The incidental inconvenience that neither of these subjects has any reality seems only to increase the ferocity of the belligerents Except for a customs union and some shaky rules about agriculture. Europeans have created no alternative to the deadly embrace into which modern technology has locked the superpowers and their military dependents. Unity calls for discomfort and even bloodshed. The Europeans are unprepared for either.

Ambassador Schaetzel (IHT April 9) has succeeded in isolating the viruses of divergence which one can loosely label "European" or "American." He is quite right in stating that differences over trade, money, energy, regionalism, underdevelopment, and even the role of governments, are extensive but too ephemeral to justify the envy and suspicion which gnaw at the capital of our common interests and traditions. The President cares nothing for either, He prefers to rub the noses of the French and other Europeans in their sadly rediscovered economic and military dependence. But the whirligig of time hrings in its revenges. Thoughtful people on both sides of the Atlantic. seeing the President's inability to distinguish, as Mr. Pompidou did, between personal misfortune and global problems, will feel even graver doubts about his capacity for the international leadership to which he never ceases to lay claim.

JOHN BOVEY.

Abortion Issue The indictment of Dr. Kenneth Edelin of Boston for manslaughter

(IHT, April 15) raises once again the issue in the abortion controversy-human life. We happen to know a baby who was born prematurely, at 24 weeks, a year ago, and who just celebrated her first birthday. If the doctor who had delivered that baby had made no efforts to save her, the child's perents would have had every right to bring charges of negligence or even manslaughter against their doctor. But the woman whom Dr. Edelin aborted did not want the child, also 24 weeks old, therefore, I assume. no attempts were made to save him. In one instance the child lived because the parents wanted her, in the other, the child was permitted to die or was killed (we do not know the facts of the case) because the parents did not want him. The pagan Roman practice of parents deciding over the life or death of their child is with us once again. Furthermore, can no one the implicit affirmation of the humanity of the fetus in the four other doctors' attempts to develop means via research to prevent intrauterine infections in it? And can no one see the absurd illogicality of killing one fetus to advance the humanitarian cause of protecting others? Robert Reinhold's article (although not intentionally) affirms throughout the humanity of the fetus, as do, ironically, the actions of the abortionist and researchers. MARTHA HAAS.

Shultz's Successor Didn't Inherit the Clout

By Richard E. Mooney

NEW YORK, April 31 (NYT). -President Nixon, as usual, has made one thing perfectly clear, William Simon is not George Shultz. But who is? Mr. Shultz is leaving the administrationleaving his post at the Treasury and leaving his even higher post at the White House. Mr. Simon

Treasury. Mr. Simon is not being chastised. Far from it—he is being promoted. While his brief energy czardom may have been less than a total success in terms of delivering enough gasoline to enough places, it did succeed in galvanizing the government apparatus when it was needed. However, Mr. Simon is still a relative newcomer to Washington and apparently has not moved yet to the middle of the inner circle. In any case, it was predictable that Mr. Chultz's successor would not inherit the Shultz clout. President Nixon underscored the obvious by having the Simon appointment announced by a second-rank spokesman on a dog when Mr. Simon was not even in town.

Low-Grade Slurs

Apart from these low-grade slurs to the importance of the job, though, no one expected that Mr. Simon-or anyone else who comes to mind-would slip into the uniquely powerful and personal role that Mr. Shultz has held in the Nixon government. But the President walked into yet another credibility gap of his own making when he told his spokesman to say that henceforth he, the President, would be top dog on economic policy. A president can be top dog of anything he wants to be in his administration. All. or most, presidents have readily assumed the role in foreign policy. But none, at least none since Frank-lin Roosevelt, has seriously presumed to act with equal force in economics.

Actually, the situation calls for it now. The inflation problem that President Nixon faces at this very moment could turn out to be as serious as the great depression of the Roosevelt years.

himself as seriously as he says he will-doubtful on the basis of the administration's already established record of economic policy gone wrong, and doubtful on the historic record of presidents who, in their hearts, are not at ease in economics. If President Nixon is not going to be the real director of Washington economic policy, then who will be? The only possible answer right now is that there is a new ball game, and it will be a while before anyone, including the players, can be sure who has control of the ball.

There have been many "inside" stories from the capital lately about the power struggle between Roy Ash, director of the Office of Management and Budget, and the ascendant Mr. Simon, Those stories told us that Mr. Ash would probably emerge as No. 1 and so far he has not. Presumably the struggle continues. Meanwhile, there are a number of verities about power in Washington that should be kept in mind. And for this discussion it does not matter whether the chief executive is or is not about to be impeached. First, because presidents sim-ply do not enter into economic policy as vigorously or naturally as they do into demestic politics and foreign affairs, the man or men at the top of an administration's economic policy apparatus normally have an extra quotient of power. Short of a real crisis the President is not constantly involved.

Second, there is a natural diffusion of economic power centers in a government—the chief financial officer (Treasury), the chief monetary officer (Federal Reserve), the chief economist (Council of Economic Advisers) and the fellow who controls how the money is spent OME. In addition there are, from time to time, ad hoc coars in charge of energy crises, price-wage controls and other abnormal problems.

NEW YORK, April 21 (NYT).-The stock market made a comeback last week after its recent weakness as prices advanced in continued slow trading.

New York Stock Market

Reflecting the upward trend, the widely followed Dow Jones industrial average ended the week 15.09 points higher at 859.90. Prices on the New York Stock Exchange finished slightly lower last Monday and then moved ahead for the next three sessions. On Tuesday the market made its best advance in six weeks, buoyed by investors' hopes that interest rates would soon decline.

Tuesday's buying spree, which saw the Dow climb 17.44 points. was touched off by the First National City Bank's forecast that short-term interest rates would turn downward in the next few months. Climbing short-term rates have put a damper on stock prices since mid-March. Late last month the banks' prevailing prime rate was 8 3/4 percent.

Last week most major banks increased their prime rate to 10 1 4 percent. And one institution, the Citizens and Southern National Bank of Atlanta, raised its rate to a record 10 1/2 percent on

Some money market experts expect both short-term and longterm interest rates to continue to increase, with the prime rate possibly climbing to 11 percent before it starts declining.

Rabbits Also Can Retire In Florida

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 21 'Reuters',-The Florida State Senate has unanimously voted to prohibit the use of live rabbits in the training of racing greyhounds.

Use of live rabbus has been a controversial issue in Florida for several months, with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals leading a fight against the practice. Dog tracks in America use mechanical rabbits for the rares. Last November, a judge in Ocala ordered training farm owners to discontinue the practice, but gave them until Dec. 1, 1974, to comply with the order. The measure approved this week by the State Senate classifies using live rabbits as a first - degree misdemeanor punishable by a maximum find of $1,000 and one year in jail. The bill now goes to the State House of Representatives. where passage is regarded as a certainty.

Given Visa for Israel

MOSCOW, April 21 Reuters -Prof. David Asbel, 63, who spent 16 years in Stalin's labor camps, has been granted permission to emigrate to israel with his family. Jewish sources say.

He reportedly was given permis sion to leave the country with wife, Rachel, and son, Vladumir, and will go as soon as he has collected his documents. Dr. Azbel, a professor of chemis-try, earlier was refused permission to emigrate. He staged a two-week hunger strike in protest.

Economic Scene

(Continued From Page 9) seemed to matter more than anyone else. The reports that Mr Ash wanted the Treasury job this time around would seem to confirm that it is still supreme in Washington.

Thira, presidents, like other people, delegate their trust to a selected few, and it hardly matters what the title on the door says. If President Nuton felt he could work better with Mr. Shultz than with X. Y or Z. then the argument stops there. Mr. Shultz is No. 1 Pre-Shultz, Mr. Nixon showed preference for Arthur Burns, and now he may be was the strong man as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. Mr. Ash, if he really turns out to be the next strong man, would be coming at it from yet another direction. There will be, of course, a very practical and real difference when Mr. Shultz leaves. The super-job that he holds as assistant to the President will disappear with him. His White House office and his commanding White House authority will be wiped from the board. Someone will fill the role, however, whether there is a new title or not, because the role is natural and essential as the ultimate reconciler of issues and pressures that feed finally

Forty years later. alas, there is little reason to re-vise this observation. Stieglitz remains today what he was in his own lifetime — enigmatic, immense, but unknown to all but a small circle of devotees, an artist whose achievement has not been fully charted and a man whose energetic earthly existence has been blurred by a general tendency to indulge in spiritual

The tone of abject piety was set early on by Stieglitz's first circle of grateful admirers—it was clearly a tone Stieglitz invit-ed—and it has continued without significant modification to domi-nate all discussions of the man and his work. Inevitably, it is a tone that has lost its credibility with the passage of time. What is needed is a critical approach that places Stieglitz firmly in history, where money, material circumstance, inherited culture, the pressures of taste and appetite and other biographical parameters all conspire to determine the boundaries of both art and life. Yet this is precisely what has been denied us.

There can be no question that

Dorothy Norman, in her new book on Stieglitz, writes as a disciple totally committed to all the pieties I have described.

Once launched on the story of Stieglitz's life, however, Mrs. Norman gives us a very readable text. The atmosphere of worship is never absent, but it is obliged to accommodate itself to a good deal of concrete documentation. The result is not a defini-tive biography, but the most comprehensive account of Stieglitz's. life we have yet been given. In 1926, when Mrs. Norman first met Stieglitz, he was 62. He had been born into a prosperous and cultivated German-Jewish family in Hoboken, N. J. spent his boyhood in Manhattan and Lake George, and, from the age

In his publications, he did something similar—primarily for photography, but also for literature and the other visual arts. Camera Work, which Stleglitz edited and published from 1903 to 1917, was one of his greatest achievements—a beautifully designed and lavishly produced illustrated journal that, unfortunately, has had no successors in this age of cultural explosion and

It was in Germany that Stieglitz began his work as a photogra-

The volume called "Camera Work: A Critical Anthology," which Jonathan Green has now assembled from the files of this great magazine, is exemplary in every respect. His introductory essay and his lengthy notes, to-gether with his painstaking indexes and other editorial apparatus, are a model of what a book of this sort should be-a perfect guide not only to a crucial publication but to a career and a period. The literary contributors include Bernard Shaw (as a critic of photography and the visual arts), Arthur Symons, Gertrude Stein (whose work Stieglitz was the first to publish anywhere) and a roster of American critics (Benjamin De Casseres. Sadakichi Hartmann and Charles H. Caffin, among others) who are only just now being rediscovered. The plates embrace most of the photographers and many of the painters and sculptors whose work we still regard as the most important of their time.

Brett doubled to right with two outs and scored on Renne Stennett's double. Richie Hobner followed with a two-run homer over the right-field fence, his fifth of the year.

Seaver was removed in the sixth inning after back-to-back singles by Dave Parker and Richie Zisk. Frank Taveras singled off reliever Harry Parker to drive in Parker and Brett's single brought home the Pirates' sixth run.

The Pirates, who slammed 20 hits off four Mets pitchers, added their final run in the ninth off Tug McGraw on Al Oliver's second homer of the season.

Phils 7. Cubs 3 At Philadelphia, Greg Luzinski came out of a batting slump with three hits and three runs batted in to lead the Phillies to a 7-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs. Luzinski who entered the game with a .167 batting average, singled home a run in the third, drove in another with a filth-inning sacrifice fly and doubled home a run in the sixth as Steve Carlton picked up his second victory of

Observer Turn Off the Sports

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK—In early March major leagues and a comparable thing important had changed. I sional football. If you applied had stopped being a sports fan. News that the baseball teams were in spring training added no salt to life's daily routine (Nixon, taxes, bills and toil).

The formation of yet another professional football league and the resulting stampede of players for more million-dollar salaries seemed drab stuff that one had to tolerate on the 11 p.m. news get to the weather report, and the news that heavyyweight had flattened another somewhere in the tropics for the world championship passed over me so quietly that I did not even catch the champion's name. Henry Aaron's home run that beat Babe Ruth's record was, I could still agree, a splendid thing, but my appreciation of it was purely intellectual.

I had simply had it with sports. I thuk the explanation is that there was just too much of it-a new game of the century every other day. Like having a banana split with every meal, it just quit being fun.

The proliferation of teams was confusing, too. At one time 16 teams made up

616-Carat Diamond Found in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, April 21 (UPI).-A miner has found the world's ninth largest diamond, the biggest found at Kimberley Mines since 1896, a spokesman for the De Beers mining group announced.

The official put no price on the stone, a yellow octahedron weighing 616 carats, pulled out from the crusher section of the Dutoitspan Mine, Kimberley. He said that it has "several flaws." In 1896 a stone weighing 513 carats was picked up at Kimberley. The world's largest, the Cullinan diamond of 3,025 carats, was spotted glittering in the side of open workings at the Premier mine near Pretoria in 1905.

Vienna Garden Show

VIENNA, April 21 (UPI).-The Vienna International Garden Show opened last week with 25 nations displaying flowers, plants and trees. The Garden of Nations, once a garbage dump, is the main feature of the show. The garden contains 10 million flowers and 120,000 trees from four continents. More than four million people are empected to and Friday's games of the century attend the show which ends are too much for one afternoon. Oct. 14.

I became aware that some- number of teams played profesyourself, you could keep them all in your head. Not any more.

Nowadays, each sport has so many leagues and teams that they are broken down into "divi-" with divisional playoffs, and league playoffs, and championship playoffs constantly in progress. Teams with names like the Pistons and the Whalers and the Bolts and the Nets and the Raccoons are forever looming into one's consciousness.

Somebody has calculated that there were 105 professional sports teams playing games in the United States and Canada as of last winter, and new international football and baseball leagues will add another 20 or 30 teams to the stew in the next few years. It is easier to keep track of Middle East politics.

Sports has come to seem like an industrial boom. The greed of players and owners who move themselves and their teams from city to city in quest of more and more bucks make it increasingly silly to cultivate the homechauvinism on which the sports fan thrives.

How can you give your heart to a home-team here who may skip to Chicago next year for a million-dollar salary? Or feel affection for a team that may be shifted to El Paso next season? Sports, after all, are only games that children can play, yet how is the childish joyousness of the games to be reconciled with the knowledge that the player you yearn to idolize is a big businessman drawing a $300,000 salary and probably entertaining a $500. 000 offer to go over to the enemy? Baseball's racism, which everybody has been willing to forgo mentioning at one time, seems squalidly obvious now that the club owners with their franchise shifting have demonstrated that their contempt for the home-town fans is as solid as their distaste for black hands in the management.

And then, of course, the athletes themselves make it harder and harder for faus to endow them with the stuff of heroism. Boxing has become a clown show. Baseball players strike for better working conditions, like the average working stiff.

The constant court battles are also depressing. Watergate is more fun.

Mostly, though, it was the excess that dulled my edge. A demolition derby a golf tournament, a motorcycle jumping contest championship figure-skating competition, a championship boxing match, the crucial game of the NBA divisional playoffs, the climactic game of the Stanley Cup series, the setting of a new pole-vault record, the rubber game of the Orioles-Tigers series and reruns of last Wednesday's

Double-Spy 'Tricycle' Put Spoke in Nazis' Wheel

By Herbert R. Lottman

DARIS (IHT).—A real-life James Bond is alive and living in the south of France, Some years ago, Bond's creator, the late Ian Fleming, admitted that one of the models for his fictional hero was Tricycle," scion of a wealthy family in prewar Yugoslavia, who combined spying with woman-chasing, "Tricycle" was encouraged in his playboy role by the men behind the scenes at MI-5. Britain's counterespionage service. But who was "Tricycle"? Dusko Popov, a naturalized British subject, revealed his identity in his autobiography. "Spy/Counterspy". which will be published in New York this month. Now 61, holder of the Order of the British Empire, he is not quite retired from British Intelligence because, he says. "Officers are never demobilized—only put on leave." Mr. Popov is not fond of being compared to James Bond. "Actually." he explains, "I find him quite stupid." If Bond was a frequent victim of his own insouci-ance, the man who, as "Tricycle," was described by his boss, Sir John Masterman. as "one of the chief figures of the double-cross world" has not acted stupidly. When he found an attractive Swedish blonde, he married her, and now they live with their three sons, 10. 6, and 4, on a hillside above Cannes, in a house that once was the summer residence of the bishops of Grasse.

Sir John fought a long battle with the British government for permission to publish his own account of how MI-5's Committee XX ("Double-Cross") succeeded in making double agents of all the German spies sent to Britain during World War II. His book called "The Double-Cross System in the War of 1939 to 1945," was written immediately after the war. It was printed by Britain's security services in 100 copies. 75 of which were destroyed. The others were put in a safe.

Forcing a Hand

Sir John had to wait until he was 80 years old, in 1972, before Yale University Press decided to go ahead with publication and thus force the hand of the British government. The gambit succeeded, but the decision to clear the story had to be made at top levels by the then Foreign Secretary. Sir Alec Douglas-Home, and Home Secretary Reginald Maudling. "Until Sir John's book was published I was bound by the Official Secrets Act." Mr. Popov says. He kept silent even when front-page newspaper stories cited Sir John's revelation that "Tricycle" had provided an earlybut unheeded-warning of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

In his book, Mr. Popov describes his recruitment into German military intelligence by an old friend-Mr. Popov had completed his university and law studies in prewar Germany-although his first loyalty was to the British. Most of the heroes of World War II espionage appear in Mr.

PARIS LEADING MANUFACTURER in expensive knits thanderochet & continents at the continent of the continents of the contin

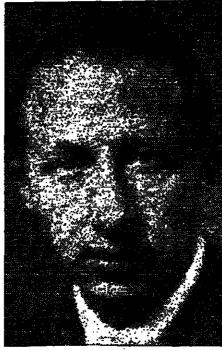

Popov's story, including the famous "C," head of MI-6. Britain's foreign-intelligence corps. He has since been identified as Sir Stewart Menzies, who asked Mr. Popov to be godfather to his first son. On one or another of his 14 trips to neutral Portugal, "Tricycle" met MI-6's Iberian desk chief, Kim Philby, who later was to defect to Moscow. He never actually encountered Philby's deputy, Graham Greene, although Mr. Greene recently wrote this blurb; "Mr. Popov, who as "Tricycle' was the most important and successful double agent working for the British during the war. has written a book which deserves to become a classic of espionage.

And "Tricycle" also had a nodding acquaintanceship with a young naval intelligence officer named Ian Fleming. "One night. I was gambling for high stakes in the casino at Estorii-although actually I was only bluffing," Mr. Popov recalls, "I saw that Fleming was standing just behind Was he checking on the money-I had gotten it from the Germans-or on me? In any case, I threw the bundle on the table-it was only to force someone I clen't like to stop playing. Fleming's face got pale, but then he smiled. He put the scene into 'Casino Royale.'" Mr. Popov's origins allowed him to play the money game convincingly. At one time, he actually got his German spymasters to use him to channel funds to their other agents in Britain.

Things I Like to Do

"But my playboy days ended when the war was over," he says. "They gave me the OBE, two civilian suits and said goodbye. I decided to go into business in the United States, but I found that I didn't like making money for its own sake. So I returned to Europe, where I thought that I'd combine business with travel to interesting places and doing things I like to do." Mr. Popov is now an international consultant on financial and legal problems, but his tan indicates that he hasn't allowed work to interfere too heavily with life beside the swimming pool hidden by 100 acres of olive trees. In addition to the large house, with its panoramic view over the Provençal countryside, the Popovs have an apartment in a new mountain resort above Nice. In prewar Dubrovník, where his grandfather was a banker and his father a factory owner. Mr. Popov learned the habit of living well.

If he looks the way a retired Fleming hero ought to look, in the three-piece tweed suit, striped shirt and polka-dot tie that he donned for a one-day visit to Paris, he might also resemble a successful "Cicero"—if the valet-spy in the British Embassy in Ankara hadn't been paid off by the Nazis in counterfeit money, as moviegoers may remember happened to James Mason in the film version of that episode. "Five Fingers."

Duske Popov during World War II. ... on leave from MI-5.

In fact, Mr. Popov was in on the "Cicero" affair, having provided a tip which pointed to the Ankara embassy leak. He was also involved in "Operation Mincemeat," in which the British outfitted a corpse as one of their officers, complete with secret documents. Their intent was to deceive the Germans on the precise location of the Allied attack on Southern Europe. The film of "The Man Who Never Was" dramatized that episode.

When he received the OBE, his MI-5 colleagues toasted Mr. Popov as "the man who blocked seven divisions" by misleading the Germans. "Actually," he notes, "to be accurate, it was 15 divisions."

Pearl Harbor Tip

Of more interest to Americans, Mr. Popov vas sent to the United States by the Nazis with MI-6 encouragement, armed with a questionnaire reduced to microdots. Apparently, this was the first example of the technique (which reduced messages to the size of the periods on a typewriter) to fall into Allied hands. The information that the Nazis wanted pointed to a Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Instead of alerting the U.S. Navy, FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover withheld the tip, something Mr. Popov feels that the British services, despite all their traditional rivalry, would not have done.

Will life ever be the same again for "Tricycle"? Until a relatively short time ago, even his code name was a secret. U.S. publication of "Spy/Counterspy" by Grosset & Dunlap will be the world's introduction to the man behind the name, Other editions will follow, in London, Paris, Milan and Yugoslavia. Although his family's interests were taken over by the Tito regime, Mr. Popov has been to Yugoslavia to visit his father, and the revelation of his wartime activity is making him a celebrity there, too.

Germany? No German publisher has expressed firm interest in Mr. Popov's story. In fact, he thinks, most Germans who believed that "Tricycle" was their man in London and Lisbon still do not know

Oueen's 48th Birthday PEOPLE: Quieter Than Usual

Queen Elizabeth II celebrated her 48th birthday yesterday but the traditional 62-gun salute from the Tower of London and the 41-gun salute from Hyde Park were postponed because # was Sunday. They will be fired today. She spent the day quietly at Windsor Castle, 20 miles west of London. Prince Philip and their two youngest children. Prince Andrew, 14, and Prince Edward, 10. were with her at the castle.

American sports commentator Howard Cosell, 53, says he is thinking about running for the U.S. Senate in 1976 "to do something more meaningful with my hife." Cosell, a Democrat, says he would oppose Sen. James Buckley, the Conservative-Repub-lican of New York, if he decides to make the race. "I'm dissatis-fied with conditions that exist in government today and I want to try to do something about it," he said. "Sen. Buckley is not my breed of cat as a public servant... I think he's been an anonymous senator except for his statement calling for the resignation of President Nixon." Cosell, author of the best-selling book about himself, "Cosell," will make his decision by next year.

Thousands were expected, but only about 100 persons turned out Atlanta's airport Friday to catch a glimpse of former Beatles drummer Ringo Starr, in town for an advance showing of his rock horrer film, "Son of Dra-cula." In the movie, Starr, 34, portrays Merlin the Magician.

The Choctaw Kid has revisited Alcatraz and found things a lot nicer than when he was a prisoner at "The Rock." Claren Carnes is now 47, the sole survivor of the six men who staged a bloody uprising on May 2, 1946, to escape Alcatraz. The abortive attempt at the old federal prison left three convicts and two guards dead. "It's pleasant coming back here as a free man," Carnes said Friday, sitting in his old, dungeon-

Carnes was only 18 when he was transferred to Alcatraz from the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan. He was under a life term for robbery and murder in Oklahome and a 99-year federal term for kidnapping. After serving his 18 years at Alcatras, Carnes was returned to Leavenworth, Paroled last Christmas, he now lives with a sister in Kansas City.

Rep. Mario Biaggi, a New York Democrat, was named Friday in a paternity suit filed by a former campaign worker who claimed he fathered her 3-month-old daughter. Biaggi called it "an outrageous lie." The suit was filed by Bonnye Hearne, 35, whose daughter, Jessica, was born last January. Biaggi, appearing at family court in Manhattan, told newsmen:

"It's a ridiculous charge... I was never alone during the campaign. I was in the company of the This is press all the time.
